The program can detect current and past antivirus solutions installed on your machine and completely remove them. It is one of the simplest ways to completely uninstall any security product you don't need, and to remove its leftover traces from your computer. If your PC has a virus or the antivirus software fails to uninstall, this software may help you remove the product and clean your registry from unnecessary files and folders. The program automatically detects the current antivirus solutions installed and shows you a list of them. You can choose which antivirus to remove or scan for it by product name, company name, version, path or description. To avoid conflicts when you want to install a new security product, you can specify a path where it will be installed and specify the name and version of the existing antivirus software to remove. Antivirus Removal Tool can also detect past installations of antivirus software. In order to uninstall any security software, the software uses two uninstallation methods. First, it uses the Windows built-in functionality to uninstall the antivirus from the software list. If the built-in uninstallation fails, the software uses the specialized uninstallation provided by the manufacturer of the software.
